The primary role of NSW Police Force is to reduce crime and violence and improve public safety. To do this, police need to work closely with all members of the community including members of culturally and linguistically diverse (CALD) backgrounds.

Multicultural Community Liaison Officers (MCLO) are civilian staff employed by NSW Police Force to help communities build trust and confidence in the police.

Although MCLOs are not police officers, they are trained professionals working alongside police, advising them on community issues and ways to better connect and understand the concerns and needs of their local communities.

MCLOs support police when they come in contact with people that may need extra assistance and services to support their cultural, religious and language needs. They ensure communities are offered access to policing services that are culturally and linguistically sensitive and appropriate.

MCLOs also help communities understand their rights and their responsibilities when in contact with the police and can help explain how police respond to and manage crime and community safety.

MCLOs may provide the following services:

- helping community members and individuals report a crime to police
- supporting and work with victims of crime, their families and community
- supporting victims of domestic violence at court
- providing referral and access to appropriate policing services
- providing referral and access to other agencies
- delivering talks, information sessions and advice on crime prevention, safety and other policing matters to the community
- working on community based crime prevention projects and programs
- developing regular contact and building partnerships with community members, organisations and community leaders
- working with vulnerable communities such as newly arrived migrants, young people, the elderly, women, new and emerging communities, international students, refugees and asylum seekers
- representing police on local community and interagency forums and networks
- providing confidential advice and assistance regarding policing matters

Most MCLOs speak one or more community languages and can also provide basic language assistance where needed.

To reduce and prevent crime and keep people safe, police rely on the community to report crime and provide information about their safety and the safety of their neighbourhood. Your MCLO can help you report crime and any safety concerns to police.
